their gifts, but also to empower leaders to open doors to women who are finding their voices (28). While academic resources provide biblical support for women who preach, it may be their stories and sermons which serve as a catalyst for change. One author reminds of the importance to hear all voices which "together create a more

In the introduction to Finding Their Voices, Love reflects on the number of years she waited for the opportunity to preach in her own heritage, in a Church of Christ (she was seventy years old). Because opportunities for women to preach in conservative churches remain infrequent, Love has collected these sermons as a way to "document that history as well as preserve their words" (25).
